A Brief History of the Old Police Station, Sedgley

The building now known as the Old Police Station in Sedgley has a rich and varied past, reflecting the evolving needs of the local community over centuries.

18th Century Origins

Originally constructed in the mid-1700s, the building first served as Sedgley's village workhouse, providing shelter and labor for the poor. Conversion to a Police Station (1860s)

In the early 1860s, the building was repurposed into a police station, complete with holding cells and a courtroom. A lease agreement dated October 11, 1864, formalized its use by county authorities, who rented it for £60 per year.

A Century of Service

For over 100 years, the station played a central role in local law enforcement. It later became part of the West Midlands Police network, continuing to serve the community well into the modern era.
