Individually designed and built for the owner's family in 1963, the house enjoys privacy in its plot, being set back from the road with a broad and deep frontage.

The interior is remarkably bright by virtue of its large windows which give views over the front and rear gardens. The entrance hall is spacious and leads to the two living rooms and kitchen and there are three bedrooms and bathroom on the first floor. A pull-down ladder leads to two loft rooms, one with a window, so there's scope for a full loft conversion. The level gardens encompass the house and the space to one side of the house extends to almost 8 metres.

Maintained and improved over the years, the house is now ready for its new owners to refurbish and make their own, and there is ample space for substantial side and rear extension or even complete replacement, subject to the usual consents.
