Title register restrictions (WM553863):

Here is a summary but a property lawyer can advise further:- The property benefits from all the legal rights (known as 'easements') granted in the original lease, such as the right to use shared access ways and services.

- The owner has the right to use the specific parking space that is included as part of the property's legal title.

- The electricity company has the right to enter the land to repair and maintain their cables and equipment, provided they fix any damage caused.

- The owner must not do anything on the property that could be a nuisance or annoyance to the neighbours or the previous development company.

- The owner must not build any structures or plant trees near the electricity lines without getting written approval from the electricity company first.

- The owner is not allowed to change the ground levels in a way that would interfere with the electricity equipment.

- The owner must pay a fair share of the costs for cleaning and repairing shared pipes, wires, and cables (referred to as 'conducting media').
- The owner must not break any planning permission rules related to the building.
- The owner must maintain any trees or landscaping on the property to the satisfaction of the local council and the development corporation.
- No buildings or structures can be put up within three metres of any public sewers or manholes.
- The owner cannot dig new foundations or carry out major excavations without written approval from the local planning authority.
- There are rules in the lease that limit how the property can be sold or transferred to ensure all legal requirements are met.
