Bone Mill Development

With Planning Permission – Dating back to the mid to late 19th century, this former Bone and Corn Mill is located in the rural hamlet of Bolingey and is set to become part of a striking, cross contemporary and period family living. Set within its own grounds, which include a small woodland and a beautiful enclosed meadow totaling approximately 0.8 acres, it is ideal for those looking to build their dream home with a bit of land, close to the coast. Planning documents can be found on the Cornwall planning register - REF PA22/04156

The dwelling will truly combine the old with the new, retaining original features such as the old stone walls, Delabole slate roof, and the reinstated water wheel, while incorporating an expanse of glass overlooking the meadow. The granted planning permission and the existing architectural design aim to preserve the site's historical character while adapting it for modern use.

Accommodation for the new dwelling will comprise three bedrooms, a living room, kitchen/diner, family bathroom and a master en-suite, and a utility room.

Some History of The Mill

The Bone Mill on Bone Mill Road in Bolingey, near Perranporth, Cornwall, is a historic industrial site dating back to the mid to late 19th century. Originally, it functioned as a bone and corn mill, serving the agricultural needs of the local rural community. Archaeological investigations have uncovered features such as a post-medieval leat and boundary walls, indicating the site's historical significance.

The barn is considered a non-designated heritage asset, meaning it is a structure, site, or landscape of historical, architectural, archaeological, or cultural significance that does not benefit from statutory protection through national listing. Bone Mill Road, where the mill is located, takes its name from the historic Bone Mill itself.
